SUMMARY

The speaker recounts a series of eerie experiences that began with hearing their name called in a dark room, leading to feelings of unease and a subsequent conversation with a partner who also hears voices. After praying for protection, the speaker felt a profound sense of peace, especially during the emotional turmoil surrounding the death of a beloved grand aunt, which they attribute to a spiritual experience.

- The speaker experienced an unsettling auditory phenomenon, hearing their name called in a dark room.*
- Their partner revealed she hears voices and advised the speaker to pray for protection due to their non-Christian beliefs.*
- After praying, the speaker felt a significant reduction in anxiety and a sense of peace.*
- The speaker faced emotional distress during their grand aunt's final days and subsequent funeral.*
- At the funeral, a moment of touching the casket brought overwhelming peace and reassurance about their grand aunt's well-being.*
- The speaker interprets this experience as a blessing from the Holy Spirit, affirming their belief in a spiritual presence.*

The lights were off and I felt something like a presence in the room and I heard audibly in my ear like it said my name audibly and I said what the hell was that and I jumped and I jumped up and I turned on my light. There's nothing in the room but I knew what I heard. Like I was awake. It was I wasn't in a dream state. I was looking around my room and I heard something say my name in a in the most eerie way. I could still hear it. I didn't tell anybody that. Then what happened was I started dating this this one woman. I overheard her like shouting to something like, "Stop it." And I was like, "What happened?" So she finally like admitted that she's been hearing voices since she was a young girl. But after she said that to me, she said, "Before you go to bed, you need to pray because they know you're not a Christian and you're easier to attack." Now, I had never told her what happened. and she felt the need to tell me that and I I had already moved somewhere else at that point. I was renting a room somewhere. I felt uneasy at night. Like I felt like I it's hard to explain.

Yeah. That first night after she said that, that first night I went home and I prayed before I went to sleep. Next day I woke up in peace. Like I slept well. And I did that for like 2 weeks and I felt so much at more at peace like I wasn't being like watched or something like that. And I was like something's here. And then my grand aunt was like my grandmother. She meant a lot to me. I found out she was coming out of hospice and she was going home and they were like, "She's going to go any any minute." So I drove all the way to Massachusetts. She was sedated all day and then she finally woke up and she was just screaming. She was just in pain.

And she went back under and I was like, I I can't deal with this. Like and I I said, I'm going to go back home. The next morning they tell me she died. The day of her funeral, I drive up to Massachusetts, trying not to cry in front of everybody. I'm telling myself, you know, as soon as this is over, I'm just going to go home. Like, I'm just going to mourn by myself, like just be all depressed.

And we drive to the grave site and now it's time. And I'm like, "Oh man, I'm about to it's going to all come out now." And I walk over, I put my hand on the casket, and I immediately felt a sense of peace and I knew that she was fine. Like, it was just boom. And I said, "What was that?" What I believe now and have an understanding is that that was the Holy Spirit blessing me and giving me truth. And he let me know that um she was fine. It's so difficult to talk about.

Um so um after that, that's when I knew like there's something. This is for sure something.
