SUMMARY

Angela Fry discusses the challenges faced by early childhood educators, including burnout and increased behavioral issues in classrooms. She invites educators to participate in a program aimed at reigniting their passion for teaching and managing stress.

- Many educators are experiencing burnout due to increased challenging behaviors and staffing issues.
- The passion for teaching often diminishes as challenges grow more severe.
- The program aims to help educators reconnect with their initial excitement for teaching.
- Participants will engage in fun activities and practice strategies to manage stress.
- The goal is to foster a positive culture among educators and in the classroom.
- Reigniting passion can lead to significant improvements in the educational environment.
- The initiative emphasizes healing from past challenges to create a supportive community.

hi everyone my name is Angela fry and I'm my conscious discipline certified instructor you probably joined the Early Childhood field just like I did because you were full of passion for loving on and creating this safe healthy space for children to learn and grow but I like you have had many moments where you're like my fire is out our job is getting harder and harder we used to have maybe one or two challenging kids in a classroom now it's sometimes half or even more than half we have lots of increased extreme behaviors people aren't showing up for work right people are quitting it's a revolving door we have a problem these challenges have started to drain our passion and people are burned out they're tired and they are ready to quit I want to invite you to banishing burnout your relaunch point to get back to that excitement that passion that you had when you began you're going to laugh you're going to have fun we're going to practice strategies that are going to reignite your passion manage that daily stress and heal the hurts that you've encountered through all of these challenges that we've had over the years in early childhood education so that we can change that culture within us and at the same time connect and change the culture of those around us because when everyone is bringing forth their full passion think of the different that we can make so until I see you there I wish you well [Music]
