SUMMARY

Da discusses a teacher support and training group at their school, highlighting a collaborative and community-focused approach to foster relationships among faculty. The group meets monthly to share personal updates, celebrate achievements, and maintain a supportive environment through organized roles and activities.

- Da leads a teacher support and training group that emphasizes community.
- A "friends and family" board displays pictures of faculty members' families.
- Monthly meetings include sharing personal milestones and celebrations.
- Roles are assigned for organizing snacks, keeping time, and setting up the room.
- A "wishing well" feature allows members to send well-wishes via email and post-it notes.
- Celebrations include personal achievements like passing exams or completing marathons.
- The board is stored away after meetings and brought out for the next gathering.

hi I'm Da and in our school I have a teacher support group and teacher training group and I offer a course through the teacher education so everybody gets cuz they're all happy about that and I created a compact 4 in one board and this board is I have we're called the CD players that's our faculty family name and so this is our friends and family board and they all brought their pictures of their families which a lot of us didn't even know how many kids we had or you know or anything this is our jobs and every time we get together once a month um some people bring snacks very important some people keep us on time we have the greeters a room setup celebrations and all of that this is the jobs and then we have wishing well so we email each other things that we want to wish each other well for and then we put them on posted

so that we could change it and then we have celebrations like somebody's son passed the bar um my husband his first marathon and that kind of thing and then when the class is over we go like this and I put it away until the next time brilliant
