SUMMARY

The conversation highlights a parent discussing their child's positive behaviors and milestones, expressing gratitude for their growth and independence. The parent notes the child's influence on a sibling's eating habits, their enjoyment of tennis without complaints, and their ability to make friends independently.

- The child has positively influenced their sibling's eating habits by role modeling at the dining table.
- There have been no complaints about attending tennis class, and the child is enjoying it.
- The child demonstrated independence by making a friend on a recent trip.
- They showed affection by cuddling with their sibling at night, raising questions about future dependency.

Speaker 1: Papa and me have noticed some behaviors which we have to talk about. Can I tell you number one? Ever since we told you Nemi will start solids, you've been on the dining table, eating your meals and role modeling for him. And do you see how beautifully he eats his food now, thanks to you? You know, especially Brock. He's loving broccoli today. Yesterday he had Gobi also. Till date, I have not shown him Gobi. It's you. So thank you for that, number one.

Speaker 1: Okay, Can I tell you another thing that's been amazing? There has been zero ronaldhona for tennis class. Mama, I have tennis. Okay? What happened? How are you doing it? How are you being so, like, amazing, huh? It's been zero ronaldhona about tennis, okay? Which you've understood. You have to play the racket sport thrice. You're also enjoying it. You're enjoying it, right? Yeah. Yeah, yeah. Okay. Third thing. On the ship, you made a friend all by yourself.

Speaker 1: I think that was pretty cool. Because you all didn't want to separate out. And you were just so independent on the ship. I think that was amazing. We didn't even want to leave each other and go. I know. We wanted to go to the same place. I know. That was amazing. Another thing, I don't know if it's a behavior I want to promote, but I heard that the other day you climbed down from your bunk bed and you went in cuddled with Navy, and you slept with cuddling him all night.

Speaker 1: Yeah. Where is this coming from, this cuddling business with Nemzu? He won't leave you after a while. You can't go anywhere without him then. Are you okay with that? Yeah. Yes.
