SUMMARY

The speaker critiques California Governor Gavin Newsom, portraying him as a sociopath lacking genuine leadership and accountability. They argue that Newsom fails to address pressing issues for taxpayers while diverting attention to less relevant topics, ultimately suggesting that he avoids confronting the real problems facing California.

- Newsom is criticized for not taking concrete actions to benefit California taxpayers.*
- The speaker describes Newsom's communication style as insincere and lacking substance.*
- They compare Newsom's political ambitions to running a poorly managed taco stand, emphasizing his ineffectiveness.*
- The speaker highlights Newsom's failure to address high gas prices, attributing them to state regulations rather than oil companies.*
- They recount a personal encounter with Newsom, noting his evasiveness on key issues like beach closures during the pandemic.*
- The discussion touches on the importance of parental involvement, particularly fathers, in addressing societal issues.*
- The speaker argues that Newsom's responses to complex problems are overly convoluted and avoid direct accountability.*
- They suggest that Newsom's political challenges stem from trying to appease a diverse and demanding constituency.*

You know, Gavin Newsome does all his videos and his vlogs and his address to the nation. I was like, do one good thing for taxpayers in California and then go after Trump. One piece of legislation or one move that would help your average California taxpayer and then you can assassinate Trump verbally. But Gavin Newsome's a sociopath. I don't think people really fully understand who that guy is and who that guy isn't. He He is nothing. He'll talk about trans rights and sports if he's in one setting and then say it's unfair in another setting. I don't think people fully understand who that guy is. I sat in a room with him for an hour and tried to talk to him and there's nothing there. And the the idea that he has designs on, you know, sort of global domination is insane because he's basically a guy, he's like a guy who runs the world's worst taco stand. He makes the worst tacos and then he starts saying, "I want a franchise and get my horrible tacos to everyone in the United States." And I'm the guy who lives across the street from his taco stand going, "This guy makes the worst tacos ever. He wants to franchise. It's never going to work." You can always tell he's full of when he does his damn and hell. Like these damn people come here to work hard.

Hell, I don't care what what I sound like right now. Damn. When he says damn and hell, that's his false sort of out. He does a feigned outrage thing. You know, people would say the same about Trump. They go he's a sociopath. He's whatever. Okay. All granted. But Trump always talks about taxes and border the economy and gas prices and stuff like that. If Newsome if I heard Newsome go, gas prices in California are way too high. I got to bring them down. I don't care what it's going to take. I'm going to do it. Then I would go, "All right. Well, the sociopath makes makes a point." But he never says that. He blames the oil companies. And it turns out it's not the oil companies gouging us, it's your overregulated state that is causing the high gas prices. I ran into him briefly during Chris Cuomo's show um right before the debate with him and Trump where he was explaining that Biden was going to mop up Trump in the debate. I should take Gavin Newsome to the track and pick some ponies with me and really really make some coin. But um I did ask him about shutting down the beaches and arresting guys paddle boarding in the bay and shutting down outdoor dining and uh he didn't have any answers.

But uh you know what their number one answer with CO is? We didn't know. We didn't know anything. Oh, okay. That's f that's a fantastic what a leader. You didn't know anything. So, you bulldoze skate parks at the beach and you cut down the outdoor volleyball courts at the beach because you didn't know anything. Okay. What else don't you know about that you can then overreact to and then we can be victims of genius. You know, I argued with him about many subjects, but one of the arguments I was actually thinking about today is I said, "Where are the dads? Why don't you tell these people stay stay behind and raise your kids now? for him he thinks that's a hate crime. So if you say so what Gavin Newsome does is he goes black people and brown people are suffering in in inordinately in in in much higher levels than everyone else. And then you say why are they suffering? And then he says everyone's suffering. Why did you only bring up those two groups? And then he says, "Because they're suffering so much more." And then I say, "Why are they suffering so much more?" And then he goes into a long- winded sort of hodgepodge of racial missteps of this country and acts from the 60s and the 40s. And then I start bringing up dads not being present in the home. And then he argues about it. And then he says it's important. And then he goes back and says it's got to be many different things. And that's just one of the things. And then he's essentially arguing against gravity. And when people are arguing against what is, then they have to bend themselves into pretzels in order to do it. Because if I said, "Well, I'm taking the progravity argument." And you said, "I'm taking the negative gravity argument." And I said, "Oh, okay. Good. Hear this. There you go. Argue away." They couldn't just come up with a three-word answer. They'd have to start going into systemic this and historical that and what we didn't know about uh Evian bottles and carpeting and they they would have to go a thousand different directions because I just dropped a bottle in front of him and it hit the ground. And that's essentially what Gavin Newsome does. Now, he's a sociopath in that I don't know that he knows who he is or what he stands for, what he thinks. He thinks anything anyone wants him to think. He has a I mean, he has a, you know, to be fair to him, he has a tough job. He has a constituency that's filled with nut jobs and he has to try to satiate them all the time. And if he ever just said, "Hey, get your together.

Dads, raise your kids. Kids, do your homework and we're done." Then he would be and feathered. So he can't say what it is. He's a roofer and he goes and looks at a house and it has a 10tx 10 ft hole in the middle of the roof and somebody says, "Why is all the water pouring in?" And he says, "It's a multitude of issues." and it's nuanced and you go, "There's a 10-ft hole in the roof." And he goes, "This is about gutters. It's about fascia." And then you go, "There's a 10-foot hole in the roof." And he goes, "My grandparents came here with no roof." And he go, "There's a 10-ft hole in the roof." And he goes, "It's much more detailed and nuanced than that, and I wish I could sit here." So, he's got a really hard job because he's a roofer. There's a 10-ft hole in the roof. all the water's pouring through it and he has to talk about everything except for the 10-ft hole in the roof. And most Democrats paint themselves in a corner and so you have to, you know, you're there's a 10-ft hole in the roof and you're going back to 1851.
