SUMMARY

The discussion centers on the evolution of political thought among left-leaning academics, particularly in light of government responses to crises like the COVID-19 pandemic. The speaker expresses a desire for minimal government intervention, questioning the effectiveness of centralized control over healthcare and advocating for a system that aligns with foundational democratic principles.

- The speaker notes a shift in political thinking among left-leaning academics, particularly regarding government power.*
- There is a growing skepticism about empowering government, especially after observing its response to the COVID-19 pandemic.*
- The idea of creating a government structure that adheres to founding principles while preventing tyranny is explored.*
- The speaker advocates for minimal and elegant government, questioning the monopoly of government over healthcare.*
- There is a call for reevaluation of foundational liberal principles in light of recent government actions.*
- The contrast is drawn between the speaker's views and those of others, like Jimmy D, who still support expansive government healthcare initiatives.*

you referred to yourselves as being of the left and coming out of Academia I've watched you guys evolve in your thinking even politically dig into that for me because that was like a big like wow I don't want my government empowered at the moment I've seen how tyrannical it is in a future environment is it conceivable that we could build and immunize a structure that would adhere to the principles laid out in our founding documents and can it be done in such a way that it cannot be turned against the people which is where we are I want minimal government I want it elegant how could you not come away from the covid policy regime disasters and say maybe we shouldn't have the Monopoly of the government control all of healthcare I haven't seen that many people re-evaluate such a foundational sort of liberal principle and I say liberal here in the kind of the American left-wing liberal sense like Jimmy D doesn't he's still like oh we need Medicare for all
