SUMMARY

The speaker emphasizes the importance of recognizing that we do not own our intimate partners, friends, or children, highlighting the need for awareness and relinquishing control in relationships. This understanding fosters healthier connections and personal growth.

- Ownership in relationships leads to misunderstandings and conflicts.
- No one, including children, owes us anything in a relationship.
- Recognizing the sovereignty of others is crucial for healthy interactions.
- Examine personal beliefs about ownership in relationships, especially with partners and children.
- The speaker advocates for awareness as a key to improving relationships.
- The topic is further explored in the speaker's book, "The Parenting Map."

one of the greatest mistakes we make in relationships with our intimate Partners our friends and most definitely our children is that we presume ownership over that other Sovereign being one of the greatest tips in life is to be aware and to reign in that control and ownership you own nobody nobody owes you anything even your children on a very big spiritual level your children also most especially do not owe you anything so one of the greatest wisdoms we can have an exhibit on a daily basis is this awareness that just because we're in a relationship with someone doesn't mean we own them or that they own us keep this in mind examine the areas where you believe you own the other especially your intimate partners and your children this is a huge huge downfall grab a copy of my book The Parenting map I cover all of this for parents
